Monckton tour changes public mood on climate

28 January 2010

With thousands flocking to see Climate Sceptic Lord Monckton in Sydney last night, I believe we are seeing a mood change against the excesses of Green propaganda that dominate many of today's environmental debates.

Even those who arrived at Lord Monckton's meeting twenty minutes before it started were being turned away, and the meeting in Newcastle for tonight has had to be moved to a larger room of 800.

In my view, this shows that many are wanting to hear the other side of the story, now that the IPCC has been found to be accepting exaggerated reports from WWF sources, apologising for bogus scares, and having its scientists caught fraudulently altering data on temperatures to remove the Mediaeval Warm Period (800 years ago, when the Vikings settled in Greenland).

The next question to be asked, as it is in the U.K. and the U.S., is whether the CSIRO or any other Australian Government organisation has suppressed or manipulated climatic data or reports in return for funding favours.
